Foreword

THIS bibliography of school surveys and of references on school surveys has been prepared as a supplement to a similar bibliography published by the School of Education, Indiana University, in 1931. It includes surveys made between January 1, 1931, and December 31, 1937, as well as many such studies of an earlier date that were overlooked in compiling the original bibliography.

As in the case of the earlier bibliography, no attempt has been made to frame a definition of a survey and apply it as a standard for determining which ones to include in the list. Each one included has been found listed as a survey in some educational source. Rather than place any limitation on the number of studies included, many have been listed which might not fall into a strict definition of the term "survey," for it was felt that superfluous studies could do no harm while omissions might prove disappointing. However, no surveys have been included on which the information was so incomplete that the study could not be located.

Copies of surveys included have not always been available. Since much of the data has therefore been obtained from secondary sources, the chance for errors is apparent. Corrections will be most gratefully received.

It is hoped that this list of surveys and references will be helpful to workers in the field and to students of the survey movement.

The bibliography has been divided into two parts. Part I includes school surveys and Part II contains references on school surveys.

In Part I references are divided by states and are listed alphabetically under four subdivisions: city, county, state, and higher institutions. The classification "city" includes surveys of a particular village, town, or city system. "County" contains township, district, parish, or county school surveys. "State" comprises all surveys of elementary and secondary schools not included in the first two classifications. Special surveys of subject matter are thus included as well as surveys of state systems. "Higher institutions" includes surveys of normal schools, junior colleges, colleges, universities, and professional schools.

Part II is arranged alphabetically by author. If an author has written more than one article on surveys, the articles are listed according to date of publication. This part includes studies of the development of the survey movement in education, the survey technique, and the treatment, value, and use of school surveys, as well as discussions concerning particular school surveys that have been made or various phases of those studies.

All references are numbered chronologically in each part. Since there were 1,757 school surveys (including those in the supplement) listed in the 1931 bibliography on school surveys and 832 references on school surveys, the numbers in Part I of this bibliography begin with 1,758 and those in Part II begin with 833.

A subject index has been made of each part. Although these indexes are not complete, they will be found helpful in locating surveys of particular types or which cover certain aspects of the schools. Since the references in Part I are already arranged by cities and counties and are easily located in this way, they are not indexed under these headings. References are found in the index to Part I under cities and towns only when they are not included under those headings in Part I of the bibliography itself. The index to Part I is given on pages 133 to 138, and that to Part II on pages 139 to 141.

A list of magazines from which references have been obtained, and a list of abbreviations used in compiling this bibliography are given on the following pages.
